

4. Two-port network analysis with transmission matrices

4.1. Introduction to S -parameters

S -parameters are measured by sending a single frequency signal into the network or “black box” and detecting what waves exit from each port.

Power, voltage and current can be considered to be in the form of waves travelling in both directions.

For a wave incident on Port 1, some part of this signal reflects back out of that port and some portion of the signal exits the other port.

Parameter S_{11} refers to the signal reflected at Port 1 for the signal incident at Port 1. Scattering parameter S_{11} is the ratio of the two waves b_1/a_1 .

Parameter S_{21} refers to the signal exiting at Port 2 for the signal incident at Port 1. Scattering parameter S_{21} is the ratio of the two waves b_2/a_1 .

Parameter S_{22} refers to the signal exiting at Port 2 for the signal incident at Port 2. Scattering parameter S_{22} is the ratio of the two waves b_2/a_2 .

Parameter S_{12} refers to the signal exiting at Port 1 for the signal incident at Port 2. Scattering parameter S_{12} is the ratio of the two waves b_1/a_2 .

In general, a transmission line (or any other linear network) can be characterized by a set of simultaneous equations describing the exiting waves from each port in terms of incident waves.
