U S Military Information Operations In Afghanistan Effectiveness Of Psychological Operations 2001 201:

U.S. Military Information Operations in Afghanistan Arturo Munoz, 2012-04-30 The U S Marine Corps which has long recognized the importance of influencing the civilian population in a counterinsurgency environment requested an evaluation of the effectiveness of the psychological operations element of U S military information operations in Afghanistan from 2001 to 2010 based on how well messages and themes were tailored to target audiences This monograph responds to that request

Taliban Narratives Thomas H. Johnson, 2018-02-01 Why has the Taliban been so much more effective in presenting messages that resonate with the Afghan population than the United States the Afghan government and their allies This book based on years of field research and the assessment of hundreds of original source materials examines the information operations and related narratives of Afghan insurgents especially the Afghan Taliban and investigates how the Taliban has won the information war Taliban messaging wrapped in the narrative of jihad is both to the point and in tune with its target audiences On the other hand the United States and its Kabul allies committed a basic messaging blunder failing to present narratives that spoke to or often were even understood by their target audiences Thomas Johnson systematically explains why the United States lost this battle of the story in Afghanistan and argues that this defeat may have cost the US the entire war despite its conventional and technological superiority

War and the Media Daya Kishan Thussu, Des Freedman, 2003-06-02 War and the media brings together internationally known contributors It is an essential guide to understanding the institutions and technologies involved in the production and consumption of television news

PSYOP and the Information Age: Assessing US Army Employment of Psychological Operations in the Contemporary Operating Environment, 2009 As with a local insurgency the Global War on Terror requires the US and her allies to win the support of neutral wavering and hostile audiences in addition to defeating an enemy At the tactical and operational levels of war those audiences comprise the populations among which the US Army and its enemies operate The populations face competing demands for support both from US and from its enemies In what is sometimes referred to as a war of ideas populations caught between opposing ideological standpoints must as a minimum be influenced not to support enemies of the US From a tactical and operational perspective in order for the US to achieve operational success the requirement to influence those in the middle ground has never been more acute The increased importance of influence in US military operations is matched by an increased opportunity to do so The Information Age with its prevalence of communication technology and resultant dissemination of information presents the US Army with more opportunities than ever before to communicate with persuade and influence the populations that comprise this middle ground In spite of this Psychological Operations the US Army s primary capability for influence is widely misunderstood and under employed This monograph assesses the operational impact of failure to reflect the increased importance of and opportunities for Psychological Operations in modern military operations By examining Joint and US Army doctrine US Army organisation and structure and finally operational employment of Psyops the monograph identifies a reluctance to acknowledge the potential of Psychological Operations The monograph explores the factors that contribute to this reluctance and indicates that it is the inherently psychological nature of warfare not the context of the Information Age which demands a greater focus Victory

Through Influence Jared M. Tracy,2022 Covering the period from World War I through the Korean War Victory through Influence Origins of Psychological Operations in the US Army argues that the development of US Army psychological operations occurred despite widespread institutional opposition Skeptics noted that the effects of combat propaganda could not be measured like those of infantry artillery or air power Combat arms officers viewed it as an ancillary useless or dishonorable military tactic Careerists were wary of investing much time or energy in psychological warfare or psywar After the War Department established a psywar planning cell in early 1918 under its Military Intelligence Branch it then went a step further by deploying an understaffed poorly resourced propaganda section It was the first time that the US military had done such a thing After the Armistice that section was eliminated and its operational lessons were lost During World War II the army activated tactical units such as combat propaganda teams mobile radio broadcasting companies and base station operating detachments for psywar When the Korean War began the ill prepared US Army again rebuilt its psywar capability from virtually nothing The tactical groups proved once and for all that psychological operations were invaluable force multipliers in military operations These units warned civilians of imminent danger promoted United Nations humanitarian programs assisted in getting the Communist delegation back to the negotiating table and more These indispensable contributions to wartime victory coupled with recognition of the psychological dimensions of the Cold War helped convince senior officers and policymakers of the value of psychological operations Over three wars and as part of a skeptical institution practitioners of psychological operations earned for it the status of a permanent presence within the US Army
