

The importance of the availability of water and sanitation is not adequately reflected in international development agendas. Despite the importance of water and sanitation for all, only limited consideration has been given to development agendas to meet the needs of water and sanitation services to poor, vulnerable and low-income populations living in urban settlements. The supply driven approach, which is predominant, is not consumer centred. According to the author, it is concluded that a demand-driven approach, which is consumer driven, is needed. The approach puts the interests of the users of the delivery of water services. It also shows consumers to have a role in decision making processes and suggests that consumers, operating in urban settings, participate in decisions that to fulfill their objectives for living for the better to come.

Governing Complexity Andreas Thiel,Dustin E. Garrick,William A. Blomquist,2019-10-03 This book explains why governance is polycentric and what that means in practice using examples of complex natural resource management

Current Environmental Issues and Challenges Giacomo Cao,Roberto Orrù,2014-04-29 Few books currently exist that cover such a wide spectrum of topics The chapters dealing with air pollution from mobile sources air pollution and health effects and air quality modelling fall into the air pollution category while the ones related to microalgae for carbon dioxide sequestration biofuels production fuel cells and solar energy technology respectively can be ascribed to the energy topic Several technologies to handle a wide spectrum of environmental pollutants are taken into account in numerous chapters The chapter on biodiversity is clearly related to the conservation issue while the water pollution subject is tackled by the chapter on water quality monitoring Finally a general analysis on green business as well as a chapter on grid cloud computing technology for collaborative problem solving and shared resources management conclude the work Because of its breadth of coverage this book is particularly useful as a graduate text

Local Governance in Africa Dele Olowu,James Stevenson Wunsch,2004 An exploration of why some decentralization reforms have led to viable systems of local governance in Africa while others have failed It outlines the key issues involved provides historical context and identifies the factors that have encouraged or discouraged success

Water and Sanitation Services Provisioning Paul Kariuki,2010-12 The importance of the availability of water and sanitation is not debatable National and international development agencies recognize the importance of water and sanitation for not only human consumption but also economic development However in most places the provision of water and sanitation services is poor Inequities also exist in service provision mostly in urban settlements The supply driven approach which is government driven is not addressing consumer demands fully It is recommended that a demand driven approach one which is consumer driven be promoted This approach puts the consumer at the centre of the delivery of basic services It also allows consumers to participate in decision making processes and recognizes that consumers come first in service delivery Furthermore it encourages them to honour their obligations by paying for the services received

Simpson, Meike van Ginnekan, 2012 This note presents tools that can help make service providers more accountable to the people they serve The voice of users is often muted in water utilities One consequence is that utilities do not take account of users priorities and preferences The utility in turn loses the trust and cooperation of the community that it is supposed to serve The result is often service deterioration further alienating users Traditionally users relied on politicians to maintain oversight of budgets and compliance with rules and to intervene on their behalf when services failed This institutionalized a long route of accountability from user to political representative to service provider Modern approaches to public management seek to hold service providers more directly accountable to their users for the outcomes of their work Providers are expected to ensure that water flows safely and reliably from taps that blocked drains are cleared and that services are accessible and affordable to all Accountability in this context is about establishing a direct short route between users and service providers Tools for accountability cannot by themselves provide sustainable water services But their use can contribute to this goal by improving utility practices and the utility's policy and institutional environment

Moving from Protest to Proposal, 2004 National Consumer Council, 1993 Regulating Water and Sanitation for the Poor Richard Franceys, Esther Gerlach, 2012-05-04 This excellent book makes a major contribution to the literature on regulation in a poor direction for urban water supply It is extremely relevant for policy makers striving to achieve the Millennium Development Goal for halving the share of world's population without access to clean and affordable water Andrew Nickson University of Birmingham UK The aim of this book is to present the potential benefits as well as the challenges of introducing a more formal economic regulatory process into the urban water sector arena in lower income countries There is a particular focus upon the impact this may have on the poorest the informal slum and shanty dwellers of the rapidly growing cities Economic regulation usually introduced in the context of private operation of monopoly water supply can deliver objectivity and transparency in the price setting process for public as well as private providers The book describes and analyses these issues through a consideration of ten country case studies As a starting point the current situation for the provision of water and sanitation services for the poorest through non regulated public providers in India and Uganda is reviewed Comparative chapters are then presented on Ghana Philippines Bolivia Jordan Zambia and Indonesia all with varying degrees of private sector involvement and regulation Finally the experiences of two richer countries are considered Chile and England countries with the longest experience of economic regulation and the most privatized suppliers In all cases there is a focus on the very necessary role of customer involvement in price setting and service monitoring and on the role of alternative private service providers

Provision of Water Supply and Sanitation Services in Rural Areas and Small Towns Mouhamed Fadel Ndaw,2016
Many developing countries are about to prepare their new strategies on how to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals SDGs for universal and equitable access to water and sanitation by 2030 These new roadmaps need to put a focus on rural growth centers and small towns where the majority of those without access to water and sanitation reside In 2015 a third of the global rural population was living within the service area of a small piped water scheme mainly operated by water users association These schemes are generally ill maintained and ill managed Recent experiences in seven developing countries Bangladesh Cambodia Colombia Niger the Philippines Senegal and Uganda have shown that domestic private sector participation DPSP is an effective and proven approach to address challenges in small towns water and sanitation services delivery The report aims at helping national and local governments in developing countries and water professionals to better engage with the domestic private sector in the provision of sustainable water and sanitation services in rural growth areas and small towns Ofwat National Customer Council, the Voice of Water Customers Great Britain.
