Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1826 edition. Excerpt: if some did not believe shall their unbelief make the faith of God of none effect that is shall the unbelief of men be interpreted as any tolerable argument or ground to prove that God is unfaithful or that he hath no other faith in him than that which sometimes miscarrieth and produceth not that for which it stands engaged. Is not this the spirit that animates the whole revolution of the apostacy of saints. Is not the great contest between us whether any unbelief of men may interpose to render the faith of God of none effect as to the producing of the thing he promiseth. Tibi quia intristi exedendum est. But 2 Let it be granted that these two places of the apostle are of a parallel signification what will it advantage the interpretation imposed on us. What is the faith of God here intended and what the unbelief mentioned and whereunto tends the apostle's vehement interrogation. The great contest in this epistle concerning the Jews of whom he peculiarly speaks ver 12 was about the promise of God made to them and his faithfulness therein. Evident it was that many of them did not believe the gospel as evident that the promise of God was made peculiarly
