Westward Promises Orphan Train Romance Series 6:

Westward Promises Zoë Matthews, 2016-06-02 Between 1850 and 1930 around 250 000 abandoned and orphaned children traveled by train to various locations throughout the United States with the hope of finding stability in their lives. The idea for such a venture came from Charles Loring Brace who was concerned about the many young children living on the streets of New York at the time. Because of his work with the Children's Aid Society, forty-five states and two countries would eventually participate in this program, including Mexico and Canada. Westward Promises is a fictional novella, one of a series by Zoe Matthews that tells the story of Hanna, a young child that was abandoned by her mother and placed into an orphanage. After years in this institution, she is given the opportunity to ride the orphan train to Texas, where a local doctor takes her in. After his unfortunate passing, she must venture out on her own, once again, this time answering an ad in the town paper for a mail order bride. Follow Hanna through the tough times as well as the promising as she continues her way along the orphan train of life in search of love and stability.
