also referred to as the royal python especially in Europe because it is believed that African royalty once wore these snakes as jewelry Size and Lifespan Ball pythons are relatively small compared to other constrictors Adult females typically reach about 3 to 5 feet in length while males are slightly smaller usually around 2 5 to 4 feet Their manageable size is ideal for people with limited space or those who may be intimidated by larger snakes One of the most appealing aspects of owning a ball python is their longevity In captivity with proper care they can live 20 to 30 years and sometimes even longer This makes them a long term commitment but also a lasting companion for reptile enthusiasts Temperament and Behavior Perhaps the biggest reason ball pythons are favored by beginners is their incredibly calm and docile temperament These snakes are not aggressive by nature When handled gently and regularly they become quite tolerant of human interaction They are slow moving and rarely attempt to bite Instead they tend to withdraw when they feel uncomfortable making them safer and easier to manage than many other reptiles Ball pythons are also relatively inactive creatures They spend a lot of their time curled up in hides or resting Their nocturnal nature means they are most active during the evening and nighttime hours This fits well with many owners lifestyles and allows for interaction after school or work Low Maintenance and Manageability Unlike pets that require daily feeding or constant supervision ball pythons are low maintenance animals They only eat once every 1 2 weeks depending on their age and size Cleaning their enclosure is straightforward and doesn't need to be done daily This makes them ideal for people with busy schedules or for first time reptile keepers They are also very quiet and produce no odor when their environment is kept clean Ball pythons do not require the complex social interaction that mammals or birds need so they are suitable for people who prefer a more independent pet Unique and Fascinating Appearance Ball pythons have beautiful natural coloration typically a dark brown or black body with lighter tan or gold blotches In recent years breeders have developed hundreds of color and pattern variations known as morphs These include albino piebald pastel and spider morphs among many others This variety allows owners to choose a snake that is not only calm and easy to care for but also visually stunning
