time gender equality is promoted To put it differently unless the structures are addressed by integrating unpaid work inequalities cannot be addressed effectively The report emphasizes that this is the only way to move to real macroeconomics The papers have explored pathways to break these structures gradually to achieve gender equality and empower women Though the path is challenging it is feasible to reach the goal of pervasive gender equality Census of India, 2011, 2011

We the Billion Ragini Sen, 2003-04-25 Ragini Sen addresses the problem of population stabilisation from a new and different perspective She contends that the issue of fertility cannot be treated as a problem of statistics alone as it involves people who are affected by social and cultural influences Hence the author emphasises the importance of a model which accords primacy to soft cultural variables and provides insights into collective beliefs The author argues that an emphasis on the elimination of dowry and prioritising female literacy be made the focal points of a population policy In addition the author also calls for an examination of the role played by the mass media Education irrespective of religion and the elimination of socio cultural differences will lower fertility rates further Finally the book argues for the need to decentralise the population issue Dr Sen also suggests that the success stories of districts within each state be benchmarked and models based on these effective districts be made available to each state Pension Provision Philip Booth, Oskari Juurikkala, Nick Silver, 2008 This monograph surveys the results of government intervention in the market for retirement income provision throughout the world The authors begin by looking at high income democracies in which governments have to a large degree taken over the function of providing pensions They find that state provision crowds out private provision and places a considerable fiscal burden on developed country governments This fiscal burden is then combined with complex regulatory systems that are imposed on the private sector and which make pensions incomprehensible Furthermore as the authors show the ageing populations may make meaningful reform of government pensions programmes impossible as grey electors flex their muscles The authors find the same patterns in middle income and low income countries State pension systems are often found hand in hand with a lack of security partly because of the problems of corruption and inflation The state frequently does its best to crowd out private initiative but where they are allowed to families make provision for retirement in all sorts of ingenious ways The authors reject the World Bank blueprint of formal structured pension systems They suggest instead that governments focus on ensuring that the legal and financial infrastructure exists to allow people to make proper provision for their retirement So called market failure will always ensure that the result is imperfect But by comparison government failure around the world has had catastrophic effects Population and Environment Linkages C.
