Urban Water In Japan Urban Water Series:

Urban Water in Japan Rutger de Graaf, Fransje Hooimeijer, 2008-06-04 Water control is essential to Japan as more than half of its invested capital is concentrated in elevations under sea level and the majority of the island nation is exceptionally vulnerable to flooding To avoid potential crisis the Japanese have developed exceptionally innovative water management practices Offering the unique perspective of Dutch engineers considered the world s most progressive urban water experts this volume provide a detailed look at how Japan has developed its modern water system It looks at the system of Tokyo city discusses river management practices and urban flood control throughout the country and considers the impact that these innovations have had on delta regions

Urban Water in Japan. Urban Water Series ,2008 The relation between the Dutch and the Japanese has been a productive one for over more then 400 years It started with a trade around 1600 and became more intimate in 1641 when the Netherlands became the sole trade partners for over 300 years After Japan opened up to the world during the Meiji restoration in which Japan was modernized Dutch water experts were invited to work on river management and polders Till today the Dutch and the Japanese have a special relationship and a great shared interest urban water management Especially now with the climate change and continuing urbanization they rely a lot on each other It is interesting to bring the expertise together in this publication because the Japanese approach and boldness the Dutch used to have is a great example for the Dutch and international world of urban water management Japan and the Netherlands both are situated in low lying deltas In the Netherlands half of the population and more than half of the invested capital are concentrated in an area under the sea level Also in Japan half of the population and even 75 percent of the property in the country are concentrated areas that are vulnerable for flooding These areas only account for 10 percent of the total land area of the country Therefore the urgency to implement innovative urban water management measures and management practices is high In Japan in particular source control participation of stakeholders and amenities in urban water management is well developed The Netherlands is often acknowledged as a leading county in the integration of water and spatial planning Therefore a book written on the Japanese practice from the Dutch perspective provides new insights on how to realize climate robust sustainable urban water system

Urban Water Engineering and Management Mohammad Karamouz, Ali Moridi, Sara Nazif, 2010-01-20 Based on the latest developments research this book delineates a systems approach urban water hydrology engineering planning and management It covers a range of classic urban water management issues such as the modeling of urban water cycles urban water supply and distribution systems demand forecasting wastewater and storm water collection and treatment

Urban

Water Cycle Processes and Interactions Jiri Marsalek, Blanca Jimenez Cisneros, Mohammad Karamouz, Per-Arne Malmquist, Joel Avruch Goldenfum, Bernard Chocat, 2008-01-07 Effective management of urban water should be based on a scientific understanding of the impact of human activity on both the urban hydrological cycle including its processes and interactions and the environment itself Such anthropogenic impacts which vary broadly in time and space need to be quantified with respect to local climate urban development cultural environmental and religious practices and other socio economic factors Urban Water Cycle Processes and Interactions represents the fruit of a project by UNESCO s International Hydrological Programme on this topic The volume begins by introducing the urban water cycle concept and the need for integrated or total management It then explores in detail the manifold hydrological components of the cycle the diverse elements of urban infrastructure and water services and the various effects of urbanization on the environment from the atmosphere and surface waters to wetlands soils and groundwater as well as biodiversity A concluding series of recommendations for effective urban water management summarize the important findings set forth here Urban Water Series UNESCO IHP Volumes Following from the Sixth Phase of UNESCO s International Hydrological Programme 2002 2007 the Urban Water Series UNESCO IHP addresses fundamental issues related to the role of water in cities and the effects of urbanization on the hydrological cycle and water resources Focusing on the development of integrated approaches to sustainable urban water management the Series should inform the work of urban water management practitioners policy makers and educators throughout the world

Water Sensitive Cities Carol Howe, Cynthia Mitchell, 2011-10-20 Today s urban water managers are faced with an unprecedented set of issues that call for a different approach to urban water management These include the urgent changes needed to respond to climate change population growth growing resource constraints and rapidly increasing global urbanization Not only are these issues difficult to address but they are facing us in an environment that is increasingly unpredictable and complex Although innovative new tools are now available to water professionals to address these challenges solving the water problems of tomorrow cannot be done by the water professionals alone Instead the city of the future whether in the developed or developing world must integrate water management planning and operations with other city services to meet the needs of humans and the environment in a dramatically superior manner Water Sensitive Cities has been developed from selected papers from 2009 Singapore Water Week Planning for Sustainable Solutions and also papers taken from other IWA events It pulls together material that supports the water professionals need for useful and up to date material Authors Carol Howe UNESCO IHE Institute for Water Education The Netherlands Cynthia Mitchell University of Technology Sydney Australia
