Apprehension of Two Boys Solves Horse Burglaries

These authors recommended a three-step, trial-and-error, continuing process for determining the appropriate level of control. The first step is to determine the level of control that is currently in place. The second step is to determine the level of control that is needed to achieve the desired level of risk. The third step is to determine the level of control that is feasible to implement.

Microorganisms, especially fungi, are not native to these planets, but some of the bacteria, plants, and animals that have been found on Mars, Venus, and Titan may be "microbes" that have been transported from Earth and "contaminated" the planets.

Other microorganisms, either carried or transported naturally to the planets, may have been able to survive. For example, some of the bacteria that have been found on Mars may have been transported there by meteorites that have landed on the planet.

However, the most interesting aspect of the search for life on other planets is the possibility that life may have been transported from Earth to other planets by meteorites that have landed on the planet.
