Trauma Beyond Time Sarah Seiselmyer-Snyder, 2025-12-15 Trauma Beyond Time Temporal Constructs in Holocaust Testimonies challenges our understanding of what it means to be a Holocaust survivor arguing that the term post Holocaust fundamentally misrepresents survivors experiences Through careful analysis of Holocaust literature and testimony this book reveals how trauma persists across generations defying conventional historical timelines For those who perished there can be no after to the Holocaust their stories were violently ended Yet for survivors the Holocaust didn't simply conclude in 1945 Their experiences demonstrate how trauma continues to shape lives decades later making post Holocaust a misleading concept that fails to capture their ongoing reality Using the multigenerational testimony of the Tabak family as a case study this research shows how trauma disrupts linear time creating a continuous present where past horrors remain alive The author examines Holocaust diaries that end abruptly with their authors deaths alongside memoirs that document how survivors navigate a world forever altered by their experiences Perhaps most profound is the examination of intergenerational trauma where descendants inherit the psychological imprint of events they never personally witnessed For these individuals there is no before the Holocaust only its ongoing echoes through family memory and inherited trauma By reconsidering how we frame survivorship this book calls for a more nuanced trauma informed approach to Holocaust studies that honors the continuing reality of survivors experiences
