SARS-CoV-2 Molecular Structures Jiapu Zhang,2023-10-16 COVID 19 has brought us extensive research databases in the fields of biophysics biology and bioinformatics To extract valuable structural bioinformatic information of SARS CoV 2 structural and nonstructural proteins it is necessary to work with large scale datasets of molecular dynamics MD trajectories that need to be optimized This monograph serves as a comprehensive guide to optimization based MD studies of the molecular structures of SARS CoV 2 proteins and RNA The book begins by performing local optimization taking into account the three body movement and optimizing the noncovalent bonds of each molecular structure The optimized structures reach a transition state that offers the best stability and lowest energy The optimization process utilizes a hybrid strategy that combines mathematical optimization with various local search algorithms This approach significantly reduces data volume while eliminating irrelevant bioinformatics data To gain a thorough understanding of molecular stability and the mechanism of action it is essential to consider not only static NMR X ray or cryo EM structures but also dynamic information obtained through MD or Quantum Mechanics Molecular Mechanics QM MM simulations These simulations capture the internal motions and dynamic processes of molecules Furthermore for each protein the structural bioinformatics obtained from the optimized structure is validated by analyzing large scale MD trajectory databases which are openly and freely available online The analysis includes key structural bioinformatics aspects such as salt bridge electrostatic interactions hydrogen bonds van der Waals interactions and hydrophobic interactions specific to each SARS CoV 2 molecular structure The book also delves into discussions on drugs vaccines and the origins of the virus Additionally pandemic mathematical models including those incorporating time delays are explored This book is particularly valuable for professionals working in practical computing roles within computational biochemistry computational biophysics optimization and molecular dynamics structural bioinformatics biological mathematics and related fields It serves as an accessible introduction to these disciplines and is also an excellent teaching resource for students American Druggist ,1998 Top 100 Drugs Jason
