Jack wanted to test which brand of car wax was most effective. He tested four brands of wax. He cleaned the hood of his car and removed the old wax. He measured four equal sections on the hood of the car. Each of the waxes was used to cover a section. An equal amount of wax, the same type of rag, and equal buffing were used. Five drops of water were placed on each square, and the diameter of each drop was measured (cm) (quantitative). Jack could have used a qualitative dependent variable by developing a rating scale for amount of shine, from dull to very shiny.

Using Donald Black's method of pure sociology Campbell considers genocide in relation to three features of social life: diversity, inequality, and intimacy. According to this theory, genocidal conflicts begin with changes in diversity and inequality, such as when two previously separated ethnic groups come into contact or when a subordinate ethnic group attempts to rise in status. Further conflicts are more likely to result in genocide when they occur in a context of social distance and inequality and when aggressors and victims cannot be easily separated. Campbell applies his approach to five cases: the killings of American Indians in the 1850s, California Muslims in 2002, India in 1992, Bosnia-Tutsis in 1994, Rwanda, and Jews in 1940s Europe. These case studies, which focus in detail on particular incidents within each instance of genocide, demonstrate the theory's ability to explain an array of factors including why genocide occurs and who participates. Campbell's theory uniquely connects the study of genocide to the larger study of conflict and social control. By situating genocide among these broader phenomena, The Geometry of Genocide provides a novel and compelling explanation of genocide while furthering our understanding of why humans have conflicts and why they respond to conflict as they do. U.S. Navy Medicine, 1973
