major additives affect coating performance on wood helps coating formulators to develop more durable coatings It is beneficial for both wood scientists and coating chemists to learn which properties of coatings have the highest impact on predicting their service lives when exposed to weathering For instance measuring glass transition temperature T_g defines the degree of flexibility of a coating Since wood swells and shrinks due to moisture uptake and subsequent drying flexibility of a coating plays a critical role in defining its durability on wood in exterior conditions Similarly learning how preservative treatment or a new modification technique changes the surface properties of wood will help coating formulators to adjust properties of coatings in way that would have better adhesion and performance on that specific modified wood Also the effects of these factors in increasing service life of exterior wood coatings are discussed

Wood finishing today is a commercial art With the greater appreciation of interior decoration by the great middle classes has come the realisation that interior wood trim constitutes the frame of the picture so to speak Consequently the selection of color and texture of the finish for wood trim is being done with the same care that is exercised by the artist who chooses a frame for his painting The tendency to consider the wood finishing in homes and public buildings simply as one element of a decorative scheme along with the several others such as walls floor furniture drapes rugs and accessories is a wholesome development which is making interiors truly beautiful The wood finisher whether he be house painter and decorator furniture worker or arts and crafts artisan is confronted with an array of finishes calculated to confuse even the most experienced unless his working methods are based upon a sound knowledge of the most modern stains fillers varnishes and other materials Then there has been a steady change in the kinds and grades of woods used for buildings cabinets and furniture calling for complete knowledge of the characteristics of present day woods And to make the wood finisher s task even more difficult the specifications by architects and customers change constantly to keep pace with styles in furniture and decorations of standard period and novel designs The wish is always for something new and different So the wood finisher must keep up with the procession in pursuit of style and vogue Enjoy your ebook The Art Of Wood Finishing
