1973 Jacket subtitle Changing Landscape of Defense Innovation Paul Bracken, 2008-08 In a rapidly evolving business environment many successful companies have transformed themselves by reexamining their core missions and competencies

and exploiting innovation in nontraditional ways Applying this business model to national defense the innovation landscape can be said to have three regions products airplanes tanks ships processes integrated systems and retrofits of legacy systems While the DoD is not a commercial enterprise nor can it change its critical missions as a private firm might do it too operates in a dynamic environment and should be in a continual process of transformation to adjust to and exploit change Achieving the right balance of effort in these three regions will pay handsome dividends

The Linkage Between Technology, Doctrine, and Weapons Innovation Arthur J. Alexander, Rand Corporation, 1981 The theme of this paper is that the linkages between technical innovations and their incorporation in weapons and doctrine are strongly dependent on experiments that generate information about possibilities The main argument is that a crucial step is required between the output of organized R D and the formation of doctrine and weapons procurement decisions This step involves experimentation in the use of the product Today when systematic organized R D can be so successful in producing a dazzling variety of potential technologies subsystems systems and assorted improvements to existing weapons the choice among these is the critical problem Questions surrounding the use of these new things are loaded with the very strong uncertainties that we have come to accept in the technology development process itself An experimental approach to use is a necessary concomitant to the successful incorporation of technology and to the derivation of doctrine that will govern its use Indeed the notion of innovation is just as aptly applied to use as it is to technology The linkages between technology and use therefore require careful and explicit attention Leading American Inventors George Iles,1912 Shooting and Fishing ,1914
