What Nourishes the Spirit of Adolescents in the Classroom? Hilary Brown, 2002 This thesis investigated the question What nourishes the adolescent spirit in the classroom Action research was conducted by the teacher of 16 grade 8 participants By undergoing Kessler's 2000 Passages Program the students participated in 6 sessions which exposed them to a holistic intrapersonal curriculum Student journal responses were documented after each session The action researcher also kept journal reflections after each session Upon completion of the 6 sessions a postinterview was conducted which posed the research question The research found that the adolescent spirit gets nourished through encouragement by the teacher peers and parents This increases their competency which increases their confidence and ultimately their self esteem goes up which affects their selfconcept In addition the role of the teacher permeates every aspect of what nourishes the adolescent spirit in the classroom In addition to the encouragement of the student how a teacher teaches plays a vital role A holistic approach to teaching provided the best atmosphere for the adolescent It promoted creativity and choice which stimulated the spirit of the adolescent By working from a holistic philosophy the teacher action researcher created an environment conducive to teaching the whole person which ultimately nourished the participants spirit The research highlighted that in order for this type of environment to exist the teacher needs to make a conscious and deliberate effort to look within and develop their inner self before they can begin to promote this type of classroom for the adolescents they teach When teachers and students develop an inner life together they can begin to work in harmony to achieve an atmosphere where the teaching and learning environment becomes one seamless transaction Only then can one's whole potential be realized
