Edison's discovery of the electric light bulb in the 19th century. As electrical systems became widespread, the need for protection against overcurrents also increased. Initially, Edison used wires with higher resistance as fuses, but these proved to be impractical and unreliable. In 1884, John Holmes of England invented the Holmes safety cutout, which was the first modern fuse made of a porcelain body and a lead wire. This design was subsequently improved upon by other inventors, leading to the fuses used today. The anatomy of a fuse consists of four main parts: the fuse element, the fuse body, the fuse holder, and the end caps. Let's look at these components in more detail.

The Fuse Element The fuse element is the most critical component of a fuse, as it is responsible for carrying the current and melting when an overcurrent occurs. It is typically made of zinc, copper, or silver, which are good conductors of electricity and have a low melting point. The diameter of the fuse element is designed to be smaller than the rest of the circuit, allowing it to heat up quickly and melt when the current exceeds its rating. The cross-sectional area and material of the fuse element determine the amount of current it can handle before melting.

The Fuse Body The fuse body is the cylindrical or blade-shaped casing that houses the fuse element. It is usually made of glass, ceramic, plastic, or Bakelite, which are non-conductive materials.
