

A Parliamentary System of Government

No single person has supremacy over others in policy or decision-making in a parliamentary system. A Prime Minister cannot force his own ideas over his own party, much less the whole parliament itself because Prime Ministers are purely first among equals within parliament.

Vested interests need to individually influence and pressure a majority of members of parliament. Hence, it is extremely expensive & difficult for influence-peddlers and vested-interest groups to influence or control policy.
