1999 • The Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry (JACCAP) published a special issue on "The Role of the Family in the Treatment of Children and Adolescents with Mental Illness." The issue included several articles that discussed the importance of family involvement in the treatment of children and adolescents with mental illness. One of the articles, "Family Involvement in the Treatment of Children and Adolescents with Mental Illness," by David W. Evans, et al., discussed the importance of family involvement in the treatment of children and adolescents with mental illness. The article stated that family involvement is an important component of the treatment of children and adolescents with mental illness, and that it can help to improve the outcomes of treatment. The article also discussed the challenges of family involvement in the treatment of children and adolescents with mental illness, and provided some suggestions for how to overcome these challenges. The article concluded that family involvement is an important component of the treatment of children and adolescents with mental illness, and that it can help to improve the outcomes of treatment.
