I rarely part with books. But it's much easier to give away books that one has actually read, which is the nice thing about accepting books for review. Treating Generalized Anxiety Disorder: Evidence-Based Strategies, Tools, and Techniques is a quick and satisfying read. The authors point out that generalized anxiety disorder really came into its own with DSM-III-R as far as having distinct diagnostic criteria, with the focus then and in DSM-IV on worry as the central symptom. I went to look for my copy of DSM-III and couldn't find it. Then I remembered that I lost it in the year DSM-III-R came out, at my oral board exam. I hadn't prepared for the exam: I took the copy of DSM-III that I had owned since my internship year, to cram, and shoved it in a drawer in a county hospital. It was gone when I came back for it. I flunked. I never thought much about generalized anxiety disorder in those days, and not that much since.

Panic and agoraphobia, those were the anxiety disorders DSM-III put on the map—crisp, specific criteria that patients in the early 1980s felt relieved to discuss, the nugget in the swamp of anxiety neurosis as the age of psychoanalysis came to an end.

Treating the New Anxiety Kirk A. Bingaman, 2007 A new form of anxiety has emerged stemming in part from our post 9 11 reality but even more stemming from the influence of supermodernity Whereas postmodernism theorizes an anxiety that results from the collapse or loss of meaning through the lens of supermodernity it appears that the new anxiety is evoked more by an excess of meaning generated by the rapid acceleration of human life and the media's daily bombardment with serious global national and local concerns This book explores the nature of the anxiety our supermodern condition provokes and proposes that with the void left by the diminishment of religious involvement and practice the therapy session becomes the definitive place for meaning making Building on a cognitive therapy approach that emphasizes the client's belief system Bingaman demonstrates that to treat this new anxiety most effectively practitioners must help clients identify and explore their core theological beliefs and spiritual values
