

Forests and Trees of the United States

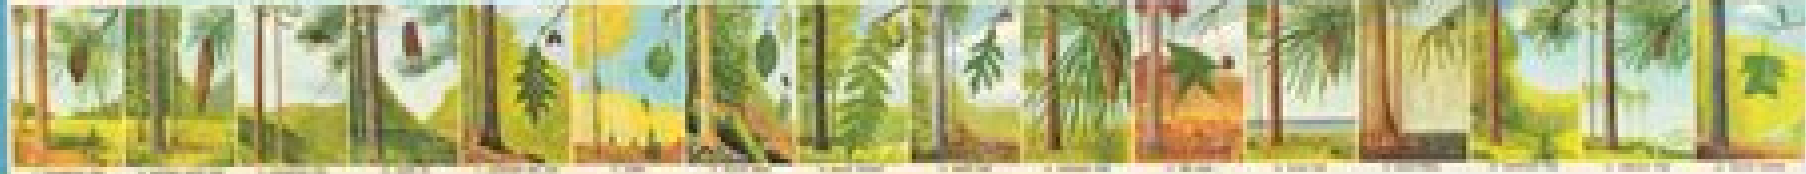

The United States has about 337 million acres of forest land. The hardwood, paper and other forest products come from all parts of it. These wooded areas, called commercial forests, are distributed in six main regions: the Northeast, the North Central, the West, the South, the Southwest, and the Alaska and Hawaii regions. Each region has its own special types of trees and forest products. The map shows the distribution of these forest products and the types of trees that grow in each region. It also shows the distribution of the commercial forests and the types of trees that grow in each region.

Forest products are used every day. The wood-making industry is the nation's fourth largest with an annual output of 2 billion dollars. Besides being used for forest products and woodpulp, the forest products industry also produces a wide variety of other products. The forest products industry is one of the most important industries in the United States. It is one of the most important industries in the United States.
