

How to Design a Wildlife Garden

High mounds: These will add excitement and opportunity for the other structural features as well as creating diverse habitats. The mounds will host many varying habitats including woodland, meadow, scrub as well as numerous nesting features and hollows etc.

Dry stone walls: These will either be built in a traditional dry stone wall way or built with gabions filled with rocks. These rock walls will act as a retaining structure at the base of the mounds. This will warm up quickly in the sun as well as provide insects and mammals. These will be perfect nesting opportunities for small mammals, insects but especially reptiles.

Sandy heath: By using the microclimate created by the south side of the mounds which heat up in the sun, by definition these areas are already heavily species rich require warm environments for toad and the common lizard will flourish and even more than Wild flower meadow: These will be sown with wild flowers that are local to the area. This will provide a perfect

Shrubland: These are low lying shrubs that are local to the area. These will provide a perfect nesting

Wildlife Pond: The existing wildlife pond will be excavated to a depth of 1.5m. A heavy duty rubber liner will be installed. The edges will be planted with native marginal plants. The west side will allow the following features:

Ecological planting: These areas will be planted with a variety of native plants, shrubs and trees. These will provide a perfect nesting

Log piles: Log piles will be left in place to provide a perfect nesting
