replenishment and stock level The purpose of this thesis is to provide a foundation on literature for inventory control in a wholesale and investigate if stock levels can be reduced while still maintaining the desired service level Based on research literature on the ABC the XYZ and the ABC XYZ combined analysis is presented and discussed Products that are grouped should be subjected to an appropriate replenishment policy For the differently characterized products models from literature on single period and multi period inventory management systems have been reviewed The multi period inventory review is split in two sub sections One focuses on the continuous review approach and introduces the economic order quantity EOQ whereas the other focuses on the less favorable but sometimes required periodic review approach The thesis follows up the literature review with the application on real data kindly provided by a German beverage wholesale The fourth section then provides a variety of recommendations for the company to implement in either the short order long term Suggestions include the application of a reviewed inventory management model and specific ideas for further research

Dynamic Inventory Management in Reverse Logistics Rainer Kleber, 2007-02-02 The integration of product recovery into regular production processes enables new opportunities for cost savings In case of a dynamic planning situation for instance when dealing with seasonality or the product life cycle new motives for keeping stock arise The work aims to identify those motives and to describe their effects by using methods of optimal control theory

Multi-Echelon Inventory Impact of Varied Ordering Policies on Realized Service Levels Stephen P. Brady, 1999-08-01 Wholesalers face an environment where different retail establishments may follow different ordering policies Typically wholesalers do not consider the individual retail establishment s ordering policies when setting and computing their service levels This research looked at whether there was a negative impact on retailers due to interactions between ordering policies Current research has focused on serial relationships in multi echelon inventory problems This research extends existing research by assessing the impacts of differing ordering policies upon service level performance for each retail level establishment in a parallel multi echelon inventory environment for slow demand items Conducted through the use of simulation one model was developed representing three ordering policies Periodic Review Continuous Review and an Instantaneous Reorder Policy Each policy was isolated and the models run to get a baseline of performance Finally the complete model was run and comparisons were made between the performance of the policies alone and interacting
