Abstract

Abstract (January 2012) Journal of Management Studies 2012, 45, 1000-1010. This paper examines the impact of the presence of a geographical administrative boundary (GAB) on the probability that a firm will be a multinational enterprise (MNE). The results show that the presence of a GAB is positively related to the probability that a firm will be an MNE. This relationship is stronger for firms that are located in a GAB than for firms that are not located in a GAB. The results also show that the probability of a firm being an MNE is higher for firms that are located in a GAB than for firms that are not located in a GAB. The results suggest that the presence of a GAB is a positive factor for a firm's decision to become an MNE.

These following table also reflect the results appearing in the previous summary (Table 10) of the individual factors (Table 10A-F):
