

What is Tort Reform?

The main objective of current tort reform in the United States is to minimize the amount of damages a person can receive for being injured.

Secondary purposes of tort reform include making it harder or more expensive for an individual to make a tort claim, eliminating an individual's ability to make a claim in court, or effectively eliminating rights in small value claims.

In other words, those in favour of tort reform want to minimize the cost of the wrongful acts they (or their insured's) commit.
