Advisor at Age
International

What have you found to be the main issues affecting older people with disabilities?

Alison: it is important to recognise that the world's population is ageing. The proportion of people over the age of 60 years is expected to increase from 12 per cent in 2015 to 21 per cent by 2050. This change is not happening uniformly; population ageing in low-income countries is occurring at a much faster pace than in medium- to high-income countries. Also, women tend to live longer than men and are therefore overrepresented in the older population in general and especially among those aged 80 years or above. While increased life spans is to be celebrated, we want to increase the number of years in good health, as currently, living longer is associated with an increased prevalence of chronic diseases and physical and cognitive impairments, which, in interaction with various barriers in societies, may result in disabilities. As a result, more than 46 per cent of older persons worldwide have an impairment (250 million experience moderate to severe impairments), and older
