process and investment for a profit The scope and method of modern industry are given by the machine This may not seem to hold true for all industries perhaps not for the greater part of industry as rated by the bulk of the output or by the aggregate volume of labor expended But it holds true to such an extent and in such a pervasive manner that a modern industrial community cannot go on except by the help of the accepted mechanical appliances and processes The machine industries those portions of the industrial system in which the machine process is paramount are in a dominant position they set the pace for the rest of the industrial system In this sense the present is the age of the machine process This dominance of the machine process in industry marks off the present industrial situation from all else of its kind In a like sense the present is the age of business enterprise Not that all industrial activity is carried on by the rule of investment for profits but an effective majority of the industrial forces are organized on that basis There are many items of great volume and consequence that do not fall within the immediate scope of these business The United States Catalog ,1953 The Theory of Business
